

Honoring The Value of You

by Jenenne R. Macklin

I'm hosting a powerful women's retreat at the time of this writing, and I'm thinking about you. Each one of you who are entrepreneurs, thought leaders, high achievers, and moms, wives, partners, and who play a myriad of other roles.

This is that time of year when we kick into high gear. Not only in our business, because it's the final quarter of 2015, but also with our family as we prepare for holiday celebrations.

One of the key discussions is about how we do so much for others, but are not connected to honoring our significance and value except in what we do, not because of who we are.

You know that there is no one like you on the planet, right? And in most instances when something is "one of a kind," it is considered priceless, treasured and valuable. But so many of us find that we are seeking our validation and significance from our roles, the success of our clients, our accomplishments, our success.

What would it mean for you to value you? What would your business be like when you know and understand your intrinsic value and allow that to fuel your decisions, actions and interactions?

What would it feel like in your business to be deeply connected to the value you bring when you walk into the room—not based on how you look or what you're wearing, just on you?

I love this retreat experience and personally invite you to join me. But for today, in this moment, I offer this holiday wish: May you BE present in your moment-to-moment living; may you be present to your heart and your head as you do business; may you pause to dive into total appreciation and gratitude for the life you have and for those who love you, and celebrate it all.

Much love & respect,
Rev. Jenenne
